Document 2:BRITAIN'S MOST TRADITIONAL DESSERTS ARE IN DECLINE AS MILLENNIALS TURN TO FRUIT

Some of Britain's best known traditional desserts are now in decline as millennials are unaware of their existence, a poll¹ has claimed. [...]

A quarter of millennials have never tasted a flan, while Eton mess² and banoffee pie remains untouched by 21 per cent. More than a third have never tried a pineapple upside down cake.

Other classics such as flan and rum baba are unknown to those aged 23 to 38, and one in six say at least 11 years have passed since they last ate jelly and ice cream. [...]

Matt Hancock from Love Fresh Cherries, which carried out the research of 2,000 adults in association with Northwest Cherries, said: "It seems millennials are becoming more health conscious and only having treats, including dessert, in moderation or looking for healthier options. Fruit, including cherries, make the perfect, affordable healthy dessert and could explain why younger adults are opting for that over traditional sweet desserts."
