MANY YOUNG PEOPLE TODAY CHOOSE OR ARE FORCED TO GO AND WORK ABROAD

It becomes a new trend these days that more and more people decide to go to work abroad, especially getting a job in developed countries.

Some think that it is a great chance to develop their skills, while some argue that there are several disadvantages to taking an international job. Both sides will be discussed carefully.

To begin with, going to work overseas living in a foreign country and learning new experience has many pros¹. Firstly, a person who takes advantage of getting promotion in overseas branches or accepting an international job will gain a wide range of experience and useful skills. [...] Another advantage is the financial benefit, as working in developed nations such as the UK or US provide a significant amount of money which is sometimes almost ten times higher than working in domestic. Also, there is a chance for one to settle down² permanently in developed nations as applying for citizenship³ will be easy if he/she works there.

However, moving to live far away from home can be disadvantageous. There are many risks that a person will face when he/she is living there. In terms of health concern, if one does not take out health insurance and accidentally gets injured, it can be extremely expensive for one to cover all the medical costs overseas. Moreover, an unwilling feeling such as homesickness or loneliness is also an unpleasant situation that a person has to face. To overcome this adaptation process, it is not very easy and requires some time to adjust to a new environment.

To sum up, [...] people need to carefully consider before making the momentous decision. [...]
